	CST	How does music bring us together? Modern technology has made it easier for people to share and enjoy music. With better sound systems, more people can hear music at concerts and events. Computers and software also help people create and share music, even if they're just starting out. By using technology, music can bring us closer and help us understand each other better. So, technology and music	How does music connect us with our past? Music started a long time ago with storytelling and ceremonies, helping people share their feelings and important moments. Today, music still tells stories and is part of many events, like school assemblies, award ceremonies, and even movies. Different types of music, like folk songs, orchestral music, and pop songs, all tell stories and share emotions. By listening to these different styles, we learn about our history and how people felt in the past.	How does music improve our world? Music can bring people together and help us work as a team. When musicians play together, they use time signatures and key signatures to make sure they are in sync and sound good together. By working together in music, we learn how to cooperate and give everyone a chance to join in. This helps us understand how to make the world a better place by working together and including everyone. So, music is like a team sport that teaches us how to work	How does music teach us about our community? Just like families work together to support each other, chords in music are groups of notes that play together to support the melody of a song. These chords are like mini-communities within the larger musical piece. By understanding how chords work together, we learn about how people in our community support each other and make things better. So, music is like a family that helps us understand and care for our community!	Learning to play the ukulele helps us work together, share music, and enjoy making sounds together. 	CST	How does music bring us together? When everyone in the class composes their own melody and shares it in a mini concert, we get to hear all the unique and different ideas. Even though each melody is different, we come together to enjoy and support each other's music. This helps us recognize and appreciate our differences while working together as a	How does music connect us with our past? Music can be like a time capsule, carrying messages and feelings from long ago to us today. Even though Mozart wrote his Requiem hundreds of years ago, we can still feel the emotions he had when he composed it. When we listen to music from the past, we are transported to the time and place where it was created. This helps us understand and appreciate the history	How does music improve our world? When people feel happy and confident, they are more likely to help others and take care of the environment. Music, especially performing music, can help build this confidence. When you practice and perform music, you work hard to get better at it. Even though you might feel nervous, performing can make you feel proud and happy. Sharing your music with an audience	How does music shape our life? Music has structure and form, which means it is organized in a way that makes sense to us. When musicians create music, they choose how it sounds, and this choice gives the music meaning. Just like we have routines and patterns in our daily lives, music has repeating parts, like choruses or melodies. These patterns help us understand and enjoy the music. When we listen to music, we feel	Learning to play the keyboard helps us work together, share music, and enjoy making sounds together. It also helps us express our feelings and creativity.
